OBITUARY.

Death of Elias Smith—He was a Native of New Haven.

Terryville, Aug. 12.—Elias Smith, for over fifty-five years a resident of Terryville, died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Oscar F. Wilcox of Chicopee, Mass., Thursday evening. He has been in feeble health for a long time, and his last illness was only of a week's duration. Mr. Smith was born in New Haven and was eighty-nine years of age. He came to Terryville in 1838 and for some time was employed by the first Eli Terry. He was a carpenter by trade and worked upon some of the now old houses of the village. He owned a farm north of the village, and since his retirement from active work lived there until two years ago when his wife having died, he sold the home and removed to Chicopee to live with his daughter. Mr. Smith leaves two sons, Oliver and Samuel G. Smith, both of Chicopee, also two daughters, Mrs. Fred Ryals of New Haven and Mrs. Oscar F. Wilcox of Chicopee. The body was brought here for interment and impressive services were held under the evergreens near the entrance of Hillside cemetery, the Rev. Mr. Kerr, a near neighbor, officiating. The burial was in the family lot.

THE GROWTH OF CITIES.

The Trolley May Serve as a Check to Congestion in Cities—Connecticut's Half Deserted Villages.
The concentration of a large proportion of the rural population in cities is well known. It has within fifteen years grown to such significance that many of the interior towns, in Connecticut as well as in the northern states of New England, are semi-deserted villages. The hillside towns, so-called, in Connecticut, feel this evil particularly. The Hartford Post, speaking on this subject, says:

The fine old places of early in the century and even down to a generation ago are lapsing into ruin. In some towns much of the pasture land is growing up to underbrush. Houses which once sheltered families of hardy farmers are, far too many of them, silent—their occupants drifted away, the earlier installments to the west, the later to the cities.

In an article in the August issue of the Forum, Henry J. Fletcher hunts for remedies for this evil. He is far from hopeful and in fact thinks that at best very little can be done. In his opinion there will be no real remedy until growing misery in overcrowded cities becomes so great that the young farmers will choose to remain in the free open air of their own acres, however rocky and stubborn, and be "their own bosses," rather than work from nine to eleven hours at cramped benches in ill-ventilated shops and live in overcrowded, noisome tenements. The life of a Bowery "sweater" and the misery of a Chrystie street or Cherry Hill tenement are the best remedies for the concentration.

The trolley has its bearing on the situation. It makes it more convenient for workmen to live outside the city. It also makes it cheaper for capitalists to locate manufacturing in the suburbs. It will relieve the congestion in cities. Evils in tenements will injure fewer, inasmuch as many tenants will move to places where for the same or less money they will have better health. This of course will not apply to the cheapest tenements, as the commutation is too much of a consideration. The trolley by rendering city life more healthy will tend to stimulate rather than check the drift of rural population to the cities.

Mr. Fletcher's opinion that the trolley will reach only the suburbs is open to criticism. Many of the decaying towns are within fifteen to twenty miles of cities like Worcester, Hartford and Providence, and twelve to fifteen miles of places like Willimantic and Norwich. The trolley with its consequences of more frequent mails, increase of newspaper reading and telephone communication will reduce to a minimum that factor in the exodus which consists of the young farmer's dislike for the somnolence of his birthplace. New activity and new conveniences will partially reconcile him to his town.

The movement for good roads is a good second to the trolley. By increasing transportation facilities it will enlarge the market for his crops. Market gardening in particular will benefit. In many towns produce which was not marketed on account of the difficulty of taking it to the city will before this century is stowed away in lavender and cedar be drawn to an urban market over road macadamized for a third or a half or more of its length, or carried in a trolley freight car. Old farms will renew their youth.

Mr. Fletcher's closing words are worthy of careful consideration. "We in the United States," he says, "cherish a deep love for the farms and villages from which most of us have sprung and whence we must chiefly recruit the energies of a race that is consuming its strength in smoky cities. Is it not possible that the fierceness of the rage for wealth will one day abate, and the people begin to look about them for the sweetness and serenity which human nature longs for in its highest moments, and which are best found under a pure sky, amid the quietness of nature? When the farmer and villager begin to study more how to enrich and beautify farm and village life, when perfect roads, daily mails, the telephone, the electric railway, the manual training training schools shall have carried into the remotest corners the blessings of the new civilization, it may be that the incentive to live in cities will be largely removed."

WELL KNOWN TO YALE MEN.

Matthew Brennan, a Porter at the New Haven House for Thirty Years.
Matthew Brennan died at his residence, 12 Elliott street, yesterday morning, after a long illness. He was nearly eighty years of age, and for thirty years he was the porter at the New Haven house. About four or five years ago he left this position on account of his age. The funeral will take place to-morrow morning at 8:30 o'clock.

Mr. Brennan was well known to Yale students and Yale men all over the United States, as he was always very obliging to them, and they in turn remembered his genial ways and liked them. Alumni for thirty years back remember him. He was an exceedingly affable and genial old gentleman, polished in his manners, of most excellent life and character, one who was worthy of the respect in which he was held by all who met him.

THE BODY IDENTIFIED.

The Man Found Under the Whitney Avenue Bridge, Sunday Morning, Was John Gallagher.

The body of the man who was killed by the cars under the Whitney avenue bridge of the Northampton division of the Consolidated road Sunday morning was identified at the hospital last evening as that of John Gallagher, a Scotchman, about twenty-seven years of age, who was employed by Barnum & Root as a moulder. He boarded at No. 29 Veto street, and was on his way home, it is thought, when he was killed, and had nearly reached his boarding house.

The body was identified by Alexander Reed, with whom Gallagher had boarded. Deceased had a brother who works at Winchester's. Gallagher was found about 5 o'clock Sunday morning in the gutter under the bridge, mangled and bleeding, but life was not wholly extinct then. He was quickly removed to the hospital, and died a few minutes after arriving there.

BANK ACCOUNTS BADLY MIXED.

Depositors Not Credited With Dividends in Willimantic in Years.

Hartford, Aug. 12.—There are new developments every day at the Dime Savings bank in Willimantic, which Cashier John L. Walden wrecked before he disappeared. Saturday a man named Keegwin, living in New Hampshire, wrote to Treasurer Holmes that he had put $50 in the bank in 1889, and had a pass book giving the number. He wanted to know how he stood. Investigation revealed that there was no record of any such deposit. Such things are coming to light every day.

In cases of mortgages, indorsements and entries have not been made for amounts paid, and the most of those paying have destroyed receipts. They may have to pay over again. Editor John A. McDonald of the Willimantic Chronicle, a friend of the Waldens, banked to the Rockville Savings bank houses in Willimantic. There were two mortgages of $5,000 and $6,000 on the property in the Dime Savings bank. It was discovered that the $6,000 mortgages had never been recorded. The bank officers last night put an attachment on the Chronicle block. It is understood that there is similar trouble with some twenty other mortgages. H. F. Royce says: "So far no dividends have been added to the depositors' account for over seven years, probably longer. If twenty of these semi-annual dividends have been omitted from the deposit accounts, the aggregate is $240,000. The ledgers will show an increase in the total amount due depositors by more than $200,000 above what the ledgers now show."
